ew surprises as Egypt shows off ms hardware in massive display

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies
Egyptian War Minister Gen. Abdel-Ghany Ghanayem yesterday said his country's defense forces have been able to overcome their offensive capabilities in a halt in Soviet arms sales, also declared that "the restoration of (Israel-held) land" remains the principal objective of the Egyptian forces, noting that fighting is the only alternative to peace. He said the Egyptian armed forces are capable of fighting peace on those who reject peace, while accusing Israel of obstructing the current peace efforts. "We are our will and strength will remain the decisive factor in achieving our objectives," he said. He said that the effects of the Soviet arms embargo, reportedly imposed against Egypt since 1974, have been neutralized by the acquisition of Western weapons and the advancement of a fledgling national military industry. Ghanayem was speaking at a military parade marking the fourth anniversary of the beginning of the October 1973 war. The parade featured six C130 military transport planes purchased from the U.S. last year and displayed publicly for the first time. There were also British and French-built combat and transport helicopters in larger numbers than at previous parades. There were also heavy 180 mm Chinese-made field guns shown for the first time. But the bulk of the military hardware came from the Soviet bloc. The military commentator describing the parade said Egypt had developed and modified many of the Soviet-made items for greater capability and to compensate for the absence of spare parts withheld by Moscow. The parade was staged at Nasr (victory) city on Cairo's eastern fringes. President Anwar Sadat reviewed the parade. He arrived in a Soviet-made command and armored car of the PTU class, waving his marshal's ebony baton to thousands of spectators who cheered him as he passed. (Continued on page 3, col. 7)

aban-Delmas here 'to invite Begin'

Jerusalem Post Staff
Former French Premier Jacques Chaban-Delmas arrived last night in Jerusalem for what he called "a visit," declining to confirm a report that he would be handing a letter to Menachem Begin, a former ally of Begin's, when he arrived in Jerusalem today. Chaban-Delmas assumed Chaban-Delmas here this afternoon. He said the French Government's invitation to him to visit France in November, officials said that diplomatic ties concerning the projected peace have been underway for some time and thus Chaban-Delmas' arrival had not come entirely "out of the blue." Nevertheless, they did not hide their gratification at this deliberately friendly gesture on France's part in sending a figure of Chaban-Delmas' standing and intimacy with the President to personally deliver the invitation to Begin. Begin would not combine his trip to France with a visit to Britain, the officials here added. The Premier recently accepted an official invitation to visit London, but no mutually convenient date has yet been found. The choice of former Prime Minister Jacques Chaban-Delmas to convey the invitation was seen last night as proof that the veteran Gaullist is making a spectacular political comeback, according to Post correspondent Jack Maurice. Observers also regarded the mission as a token of President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing's impatience to ensure that France has a voice at the conference table. If the Geneva peace talks are resumed this winter, the official announcement about the journey to Israel was made by French presidential spokesman Jean-Philippe Lecat, who said the trip was decided when the two countries' peace talks were resumed this winter. ## ldberg affirms rights at Belgrade

RADE. — The U.S., avoiding a confrontation with the Soviets, day denounced repression "in the name of human rights" and linked genuine respect for human rights with the Helsinki Conference review of the 1975 Helsinki accords on human security, said Secretary of State Cyrus Vance. "The aim is to give the world a human measure of human rights," he said. "We are also obliged to register a disappointment of repressive regimes in any country that individuals and private groups are engaged in activities solely noting the (Helsinki) final acts' goals and promises," he said. "Any such repression is contrary to the spirit and the letter of our common pledge," Goldberg said. Like Soviet delegate Yuri Vorontsov who spoke earlier, Goldberg was careful to avoid naming any specific nation. Vorontsov said "certain circles in the West" were working against détente. Goldberg limited specifics to saying, "In some countries in the East, advances have been only modest." There are individual cases, he said, where "forward motion has been stalled or even reversed." Goldberg restated "the wholehearted commitment of the U.S.

government to the pursuit of détente." He then added, however, "Let me also restate our view that a deepening of détente, a healing of the divisions in Europe, cannot be divorced from progress in humanitarian matters and human rights. The pursuit of human rights does not put détente in jeopardy. Rather, it can strengthen détente, and provide a firmer basis for both security and cooperation." The U.S. statement followed the low-key speech by Vorontsov calling for a "constructive approach" to make the conference a success. He (Continued on page 3, col. 4)

ergy-gobbling nations to limit oil imports

— The U.S. and 18 other gobbler nations announced yesterday for radical cutbacks in oil imports to help curb inflation and other energy problems to head off the risk of fuel shortages in coming years. Plans were decided at a level session of the government of the International Energy Agency (IEA) — a U.S.-led organization seeking a stern strategy in the face of all prices and dwindling sources. The IEA's 19 member nations from 19 IEA endorsed proposals to keep oil imports down to 28 barrels a day by 1985.

Under the plan, the U.S. would have to hold its oil imports to 6.8 million barrels a day in 1985, down from 8.2 million barrels currently and 18 million projected for 1985 if current consumption patterns continue. The other 18 nations would have to hold their demand roughly at current levels. Many representatives at the two-day meeting were skeptical the Americans could uphold their part of the deal. The conference stated the industrialized nations' readiness to cooperate with developing nations, some of them significant oil suppliers, to achieve international understanding on guaranteed energy supplies. The ministers approved 12 policy guidelines on the development of energy resources other than oil so as to lessen the West's dramatic dependence on supplies from Arab and other nations. The ministers said their meeting convinced them that "unless present energy policies are strengthened, there is a serious risk that as early as the 1980s the world will not have sufficient oil and other forms of energy." "Such a situation would have severe economic, social and political consequences in all IEA countries and throughout the world," a final communiqué said.

Ehrlich: Approval of working paper likely

By DAVID LANDAU
Post Diplomatic Correspondent
The Cabinet is likely to approve the "working paper" on Geneva hammered out in New York earlier this week by Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, U.S. President Jimmy Carter, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski. This was the assessment voiced last night in a radio interview by Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich, who has taken part in the consultations over the working paper at Premier Menachem Begin's hospital bedside. Another authoritative source denied to The Jerusalem Post reports that Begin had expressed serious reservations over the working paper that might block its acceptance.

Until the decisive Cabinet meeting scheduled for Tuesday, a process of "clarifications" will continue between Israel and the U.S., while the U.S. simultaneously canvasses the views of the Arab governments. As reported by The Post's Washington correspondent yesterday, the new key element in the working paper is Israel's agreement to multi-party negotiations — including Palestinians — negotiating with it on such issues as the West Bank and Gaza or the refugees problem. While there is still apparently some residual vagueness as to the identities of the Palestinians who will participate at the peace conference, Ehrlich firmly asserted last night that they would not be known PLO members. The Israeli position had not changed on that, he affirmed. The multi-party proposal appears to have been evolved to circumvent two obstacles: Israel's objection to a separate Palestinian delegation, and Jordan's refusal to incorporate Palestinian representatives in its delegation.

Israel's agreement to the proposal would represent a significant concession. In the past Israel insisted that substantive negotiations must be conducted only with individual Arab states. The logic of this stand was that in a multi-party delegation the moderates would inevitably line up with the most extremist, and no free negotiation would be possible. But reliable sources indicated yesterday that Begin intends to urge the Cabinet to adopt maximal flexibility on the procedural questions — providing always that this does not contravene Israel's fundamental rejection of any PLO participation at the conference.

The Premier is understood to feel that if a confrontation with the Carter Administration on the Palestinian issue cannot ultimately be avoided, it should preferably erupt over the substantive question of a West Bank PLO state rather than over the mere procedural issues of conference procedure.

In such a confrontation Israel would seek to rally public opinion in the U.S. to its side, and the issue of a West Bank state is thought to be much more readily understandable cause over which to do battle with the administration than the specific format of the Geneva conference delegations.

U.S. waits for Israel accord before giving Arabs new Geneva plan

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent
WASHINGTON. — The U.S. is waiting for the Israel Cabinet to approve the tentative working paper on procedures for reconvening the Geneva conference before officially presenting it to the Arab states, American officials said yesterday. Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, who worked out the tentative principles with President Jimmy Carter during late-night bargaining earlier this week, had indicated during those talks that the Cabinet would probably meet yesterday to take up the matter. Dayan indicated that it would win speedy approval during a special session chaired by Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich, during the Prime Minister Menachem Begin's absence in hospital. The postponement of the Cabinet meeting until next Tuesday has concerned American officials somewhat. They fear that the Israeli Government may not accept all the concessions agreed to by Dayan. Under those circumstances, negotiations could once again bog down. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance has been staying in close contact with the Arab Foreign Ministers in New York, keeping them up-to-date on the talks with Israel. While he has sounded out the Arabs on the basic principles of the working paper, he has concluded that the actual document should be presented to them only after Jerusalem accepts it.

U.S. officials remain hopeful that the Cabinet will go along with the Dayan-approved guidelines. They believe that the position taken by Begin will be crucial to the mood of the Cabinet, and they are hoping that the Prime Minister supports Dayan. Dayan, who is scheduled to address the UN General Assembly on Monday, will return to Jerusalem shortly thereafter, to personally pre-

Vance: No Geneva without compromise

NEW YORK (AP). — U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said yesterday that the Arabs and Israel will have to compromise their own goals if there is to be a Geneva peace conference this year. "There must be decisions as to what is important and what is less, and we must concentrate on those things which are essential," Vance said in a speech to the 22-member Arab League.

Later he had a meeting with Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy on a tentative U.S.-Israeli formula for reviving peace talks before the end of the year.

Carter remains committed to past pledges

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent
WASHINGTON. — President Jimmy Carter yesterday tried to reassure a group of pro-Israel Congressmen that his Administration remains fully committed to Israel's security and well-being, despite the recently issued U.S.-Soviet joint statement on the Middle East.

According to one Congressman at the meeting, the President said that he would rather "commit political suicide" than break his past pledges to preserve Israel and enhance its well-being.

During a meeting with 28 members of the House of Representatives at the White House, the President said that his Administration had agreed to the phrase "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people" in that joint statement, rather than the previously accepted "legitimate interests," because he did not see much difference between "rights" and "interests."

In any case, the President made the point that the Soviets had wanted the U.S. to recognize the "national rights" of the Palestinians, which could mean the establishment of a separate Palestinian state. Carter insisted that the "legitimate rights" of the Palestinians does not necessarily recognize the right to a "national" state.

"Legitimate rights" have less political significance, the President said, than do "national rights."

Carter also insisted once again that he has never supported the concept of an independent Palestinian state. According to sources present at the meeting, Carter said that Israel rejects such a state, and even the Arab states do not necessarily support one, despite their rhetoric to the contrary.

The President said that the question of a Palestinian "homeland" or "entity," on the other hand, would have to be left for negotiations between Israel and the Arabs at Geneva.

In addition to reassuring the Congressmen on the U.S.-Soviet statement, Carter denied strongly that the U.S. had any intention of imposing a settlement in the Middle East or accepting any changes to UN Security Council Resolution 242 which were unacceptable to all the parties concerned. In effect, this would mean that Israel would retain (Continued on page 2, col. 5)

PLO will not insist on Geneva representation

Jerusalem Post Staff
The Palestine Liberation Organization said last night that it will not insist that its own personnel be the Palestinian negotiators at the resumed Middle East peace talks in Geneva.

In an interview with CBS correspondent Doug Tunnel in Beirut, spokesman Mahmoud Labadi said that as long as the PLO was responsible for choosing the Palestinian delegates to Geneva, these need not be actual members of the PLO. The interview was seen by observers to constitute a major PLO concession. Israel has already agreed that the Palestinians who are not known members of the PLO could take part in the Geneva talks.

The shift in the PLO stance was first signaled on Wednesday by Cairo's authoritative "al-Gomhuriya" newspaper, which hinted that the PLO was now seeking a mandate to name the Palestinian negotiators rather than participating itself in the talks. There were indications that the concession was pressed by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, who himself has backed down on direct PLO participation (as reported in yesterday's Jerusalem Post).

Meanwhile, Egypt, Syria and Jordan yesterday reported that they were reviewing the latest Geneva "working paper" outlined by U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, and implied that they believed it needed amendments.

None of the Arab states concerned has rejected the paper outright. This includes Syria, whose Foreign Minister, Abdul-Halim Khaddam, was said to have left New York "in protest," of the U.S.-Israel paper.

Begin improving, hopes to chair Cabinet on Tuesday

Jerusalem Post Staff
Prime Minister Menachem Begin continued to recuperate in hospital yesterday from his pericardial complaint. Doctors said he will probably be discharged after the weekend and officials in Jerusalem said the Premier hopes to chair Tuesday's Cabinet meeting. Doctors at Tel Aviv's Ichilov Hospital noted that Begin was being hospitalized more "to give him a good rest" than anything else. However, despite the doctors' wishes, he is beginning to receive official visitors.

U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis, who called on the Premier with his wife, said he had been "delighted to see him showing such good spirits... relieved to see him in such good shape." It was shortly after their last meeting, on Friday, that Begin fell ill and was taken to the hospital. The Premier's doctor later cited the "tough talk" with the envoy as contributing, in part, to Begin's exhaustion.

'action' aide's ight for ortfolio sparks eculation

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The prime minister's adviser on foreign affairs, Yehuda Avner, left the U.S. yesterday, officially to a personal note of good wishes to a Premier Begin to ailing avitcher Rabbi Menachem Leason, in Brooklyn.

The Jerusalem Post has learned that Avner's sudden departure — a few weeks after returning from a short trip to New York for the Jewish Appeal — could not be aimed only by his mission to the U.S. When pressed, a source close to Avner said Avner had gone to New York to "attend to some business." Speculation about Avner's departure has been rampant since he was named to the post. Avner, who is not viewed by observers as a close aide of Begin, is said to have been in New York for a week. News of the departure of Avner's aide, Rabbi Schneerson, who is said to be a heart attack — caused great trepidation among his followers around the world and led them to cut short their holiday celebrations and recite the Psalms.

The entire floor containing the avitcher Rabbi's living quarters in a building in Brooklyn's East Side was closed yesterday to all visitors and closest disciples.

Rabbi Schneerson. (Freidlin)

Although the thousands of followers who usually "congregate" at Lubavitch headquarters were kept at a distance, the rabbi asked that they continue to send him correspondence (his Hasidim rarely make any personal decisions without the rabbi's advice and always turn to him for spiritual guidance).

Rabbi Schneerson delighted his tens of thousands of followers by making a live closed-circuit radio broadcast from his bed to Hasidic centres around the world. Permitted to speak five minutes by doctors, the rabbi addressed the Hasidim for about a half hour, but did not mention his illness. He urged the Jewish People to become more unified and return to the Torah with joy. His disciples committed themselves to intensified mitzvot campaigns (promoting the observance of the Sabbath and Kashrus) to raise their spiritual status.

Avner, who spent over three hours with the rabbi during an extension of Begin's visit to New York in July, is expected to brief the Hasidic leader on recent developments in Israel-U.S. relations, as Begin had promised during that trip.

S. knows of Israel's need r more aid to speed growth

Jerusalem Post Reporter

U.S. Administration knows Israel will need increased economic aid in 1978 if the country's economic growth is to be stepped up to the dependence on U.S. aid is finally to be reduced, Treasury Secretary William French Smith told Jerusalem Post yesterday.

Smith said that returned from a visit to the U.S. where they met with the U.S. government's economic advisers involved in aid to Israel. The series of meetings was concluded with a round-table conference attended by representatives of the State Department, the Agency for International Development and the U.S. Israel delegation presented requests for economic and military aid for fiscal 1978 — November 1978 to October 1979 — and analyzed in detail the components of Israel's economic growth which are not covered by export revenues or capital transfers other than U.S. aid.

The Americans promised to continue their aid and showed understanding for the need to ensure a more rapid rate of economic growth, Smith said.

Smith added that the round-table was held the day after the publication of the Joint American-Soviet-Mideast policy declaration, but that the atmosphere had nevertheless been very friendly.

The discussions with the Americans will be continued on October 24, when the U.S. Secretary of the Treasury Michael Blumenthal is due in Jerusalem.

Violent Petah Tikva protest over city's school stand

By LIA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter

PETAH TIKVA — Parents of pupils from four strike-bound schools here beat up two municipal workers during a violent city hall demonstration yesterday to protest the city's decision to send seventh graders to the new intermediate school.

A spokesman for the municipality said five of the demonstrators tried to break into the mayor's office. He was attending a meeting in Tel Aviv at the time. Although police were present, city officials did not ask them to intervene, the spokesman said. "But if the demonstrations continue tomorrow, we may ask the police to take measures," he warned.

The strike at the Hese, Yesodot, Morasha and Hamatmid schools and the demonstrations are likely to continue and no immediate solution to the dispute is expected.

The parents at Hese and Yesodot began their strike with the opening of the school year in September saying they were unwilling to send their children to the new intermediate school because of its distance from their homes. But after Rosh Hashana, the parents called off their strike when Education Minister Ze'evulun Hammer — over the objections of the municipality and of some Ministry officials — reached an agreement with the parents.

The children were to begin seventh grade classes in their present elementary schools, the agreement stated, while their parents' objections to the intermediate plan were examined. But this only created a new crisis.

Parents at Hamatmid and Morasha — the shul schools which were to be integrated with Hese and Yesodot in the new intermediate school — went out on strike. They claimed that the municipality agreed that Hese and Yesodot parents were really trying to avoid integration, a claim which was denied.

Representatives of the parents, police and the municipality yesterday afternoon went to see the alternative sites which the parents claim would be appropriate for the intermediate school. City officials explained that these sites were not suitable and that many of them do not belong to the city.

Meanwhile, the secretary of the National Parents' Association reported that parents in the Yarnit region also struck yesterday over the intermediate school issue. They have an excellent school in their own area, she said, but are being required to send their seventh graders to a "less successful" intermediate school 35 kms. away.

In Ramat Gan, more than 250 children from the Shalom state religious school returned to studies yesterday after a three-week strike initiated by their parents. Ramat Gan Mayor Yisrael Peled promised the parents that all the children who had been moved to other schools in the city would be returned to Shalom. He added that additional classrooms would be built in Shalom, but that the municipality would take legal steps against those parents who refused to return their children to the school.

15,000 children start long schoolday

By SUSAN BELLOS
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Education Ministry has introduced a longer school day for 15,000 elementary schoolchildren throughout the country. The voluntary longer schoolday will last until 4 p.m. and parents will pay up to IL150 a month on a graded tuition basis.

The experimental programme has been set up following pressure from the women's organizations about what is increasingly being recognized as an acute social problem — the "door-key children" of working mothers — elementary schoolchildren coming to empty homes at lunchtime using a door key strung around their necks.

However, Dr. Blanka Burg, who heads the Ministry's extended schoolday programme which was set up four years ago and encompasses 26,000 disadvantaged children, has criticized the new programme. Dr. Burg pointed out that while it was praiseworthy that something was being done to help working mothers, "nothing whatsoever has been said about the educational aims and means of the new programme."

Other Ministry officials described it as "basically a baby-sitting service which parents have to pay for." The extended schoolday, which aims to provide enrichment for disadvantaged children, is free.

Hammer: Educate the Diaspora

Jerusalem Post Political Reporter

RA'ANANA — Education Minister Ze'evulun Hammer favours "massive Government involvement" in Jewish education throughout the Diaspora. Hammer believes that the Government must join the Jewish Agency in taking what he called "the disappearing Jews."

The Minister said that at a farewell reception in honour of "Hatsot" deputy editor and managing director Moshe Leshon, who is leaving on a two-year assignment as director of the World Zionist Organization's religious education and culture department in the U.S. and Canada.

At the reception, held Wednesday night at the home of "Hatsot" political correspondent Shaul Shif, Chief Rabbi Shlomo Goren expressed his concern at assimilation of U.S. Jewry, where, he noted, hardly ten per cent of the youth receive Jewish education of any kind.

Rabbi Goren regretted that the American community, with its huge financial resources, had so far failed to raise enough money for adequate Jewish education. He noted that the efforts of such small European Jewish communities as that of Antwerp, where 90 per cent of the community's children go to Jewish schools.

Moshe Kronish, the World Mizrachi representative on the Zionist executive, conveyed his horror at the number of inter-marriages among Jewish establishments figures, saying "these men with Ben-Zion wives dominate the Jewish field in many communities."

Diamond mystery: Tal describes assailants to NY police artist

NEW YORK (AP). — Police say diamond cutter Shlomo Tal has given them enough descriptive detail for artists to draw composite sketches of two men who Tal says kidnapped him and murdered diamond broker Pinchas Jaroslawicz.

The sketch of the men, who reportedly beat Tal over the head with a wooden plank and forced him to hide Jaroslawicz's body in Tal's office, is not yet ready for release.

Tal, 31, is under police guard at a secret location, held as a material witness in the case. Still missing are perhaps $1m. or more in diamonds that Jaroslawicz was carrying when slain on September 20.

Meanwhile, police have widened their investigation to include a second diamond broker murdered in the last three months and another who disappeared. They said three robberies in the first nine months of this year have netted $3.5m.

To cope with the murders and robberies, police have set up a special force headed by Deputy Chief Timothy Dowd. Dowd led the manhunt for the killer known as "Son of Sam."

Seamen and shippers to ask Ehrlich to resolve income tax problem

By YA'ACOV FREIDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — The heads of the shipping companies and the two seamen's unions agreed yesterday on a joint effort to persuade the Treasury to adopt a new approach to the seamen's income tax problem.

At a meeting lasting more than two hours, they decided to ask Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich for a meeting on the issue to ensure the survival of Israel shipping.

Both sides have in effect rejected the proposal of the deputy finance minister, Yehoshua Flom, to impose the tax reform on the seamen but grant them a tax-free foreign currency allowance of $40 for each day spent in a foreign port and $750 for each day at sea. The companies proposed granting lump sum allowance up to $500 each per month.

Fined for overcharging

HAIFA (Itim). — A Haifa household-goods merchant, Shmuel Brandes, was fined IL1,000 in the Magistrate's Court here yesterday for making an illegal 51 per cent profit on a bottle of carpet-cleaning fluid.

Brandes, who runs a store at 50 Rehov Eshkol, was brought to court after charging a local woman IL33 for the product — a price which the Commerce and Industry Ministry found exorbitant.

In pressing the charge, the Ministry noted that the cleaning fluid is a price-protected product, and Brandes' 51 per cent profit was far out of line.

Beethoven in J'lem

The Jerusalem Philharmonic Orchestra will commence its new season on Tuesday with a special Beethoven concert to mark the 150th anniversary of the composer's death.

The concert, which will take place in the Jerusalem Theatre, will be repeated on Wednesday, and again on October 25 and 26. All subscriber programmes will be given twice this year, a JFO spokesman said, on consecutive Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

The opening concert will be led by English conductor Edward Downes, for many years at London's Covent Garden, and the soloist will be French pianist Michel Béroff.

Much talk, no action on Gaza services

By EVI ABERNETHY
Jerusalem Post Reporter

GAZA — Sources in the local military government this week could not point to any concrete advances — not even newly approved plans or budgets — resulting from the government's controversial decision two months ago to grant "equal services and privileges" to residents of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Officials at the Gaza municipality, meanwhile, said there are many areas where services provided by the military government are lagging far behind those available in Israel, including inadequate staff and equipment at Gaza's Shifa hospital and deficiencies in the Strip's educational system.

One result of the government's decision that military government sources could point to is "discussions on the preparation of larger budgets for the rehabilitation of residents of Gaza's refugee camps."

To date solutions have been found for about 3,000 refugee families in the Gaza Strip — by providing them either with new housing or a plot of land on which they could build a home. The military sources felt that the present rate does not even keep up with the natural growth of the Strip's refugee population of approximately 150,000, and that larger budgets would enable the military government to implement the policy more effectively.

Such budgets, it was understood, are only now in the final stages of discussion and probably will not come into effect until the beginning of the new fiscal year next April.

Military sources could also point to the "continuing discussions" on the implementation of a voluntary health insurance programme for Gaza residents, but it is understood, the projected programme was not initiated by the present government.

At present only local residents who are employees of the military government or police are covered by such insurance schemes.

As for the government's announced intention to implement laws governing child labour on northern Sinai, the Jerusalem Post has learned that the only change in the present law will be to raise the minimum employment age from 12 to 14 years. The law is still under consideration and awaiting government approval. As far as can be determined, no arrangements are being made for additional manpower or budgets to help enforce the new ordinance.

The military sources felt that the Gaza education system was "satisfactory," and said that ways to improve it would be difficult to find. They also saw no need for immediate improvement of the Strip's welfare system or for an increase in the number of hospitals.

The sources said that a certain amount of pressure has been exerted by Defence Ministry officials in Tel Aviv to try to speed up progress in existing programmes.

A conversation this week with Gaza Town Clerk Issam Shawwa gave the impression that the military government has much to do before it can convince local residents that they are receiving services equal to Israel's.

While stating that he has seen "no improvement in existing services" since the new government's decision, Shawwa pointed to "inadequate" conditions at Gaza's Shifa hospital. He felt that sanitation standards there are not comparable to those in Israel, equipment is lacking and the medical staff needs training in modern techniques.

He also had reservations about local schools, claiming that Israel has only added four schools to the forty that were built during the Egyptian administration of the Strip. He pointed to the large numbers of pupils who learn in split shifts in the overburdened facilities, noting that his son only attends school from 8:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. due to these conditions.

Shawwa felt that the Israelis should invest more money to improve local conditions, on the principle that the better the living situation the better the relations between the two populations will be. But he dismissed the Israeli announcement of equalization of services as mere "propaganda."

The military government sources agreed that there is much left to be desired at Shifa hospital, but pointed to the dramatic improvement there over the past ten years. They also acknowledged that there was a need for more schools and a reduction in the split shifts in military government run schools, but claimed that each year the number of affected students grows smaller.

In general, the impression is that very little has changed here in the last two months following the decision on equalization of services. Military sources can point to no new budgets or plans which aim at implementation of the policy. So far, the only products of the decision, which created anti-Israeli repercussions around the world, are discussions on increased budgets for one programme and on a minor change in local child-labour laws.

650 Gazans to study in Egyptian universities

Jerusalem Post Reporter

GAZA — Egyptian educational institutions have accepted 650 Gaza residents for university places in the coming academic year. An additional 280 residents of Sinai, mostly from El Arish, have also been accepted, according to lists received here by the local military government.

Some 500 students are scheduled to make the trip through the Sinai buffer zone supervised by UN personnel on October 10, joining a number of their fellow-students who crossed earlier.

Military government sources reported that special treatment conditions for Gaza residents, as compared to students from Sinai, who are considered Egyptian citizens, despite promises from Egyptian authorities to the contrary. Local students, according to the sources, are forced by the Egyptians to wait a full academic year following the completion of Egyptian matriculation examinations for the chance to be accepted for the next academic year.

The sources added that the Egyptian authorities do not allow any of the students the opportunity to choose the profession they want to study, but rather assign students to various areas on the basis of the results of their matriculation exams.

Beach reclamation project in Gaza

By EVI ABERNETHY
Jerusalem Post Reporter

GAZA — Municipal authorities here have approved the first stage of a project to reclaim the local eroding shoreline, which has been endangering buildings located along the shore and reducing the swimming beaches.

Gaza town clerk Issam Shawwa told The Jerusalem Post this week that the first stage involves the construction of six 50-metre long braced to protect the shore from direct onslaught of waves and to help on-trap sand.

A report by a Haifa engineering firm blamed the erosion on two jetties built by the military government for the now idle Gaza port, which affected water currents and movements of sands. Shawwa said the military government has promised to pay half of the estimated IL600,000 cost. The rest will be borne by the municipality and owners of beach establishments.

Shawwa said that eventually twin breakwaters will be constructed about 200 metres from the shore, costing IL7-10m. This cost will be borne entirely by the municipality from funds from Abu Dhabi.

Seamen and shippers to ask Ehrlich to resolve income tax problem

By YA'ACOV FREIDLER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

HAIFA — The heads of the shipping companies and the two seamen's unions agreed yesterday on a joint effort to persuade the Treasury to adopt a new approach to the seamen's income tax problem.

At a meeting lasting more than two hours, they decided to ask Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich for a meeting on the issue to ensure the survival of Israel shipping.

Both sides have in effect rejected the proposal of the deputy finance minister, Yehoshua Flom, to impose the tax reform on the seamen but grant them a tax-free foreign currency allowance of $40 for each day spent in a foreign port and $750 for each day at sea. The companies proposed granting lump sum allowance up to $500 each per month.

HAIFA (Itim). — A Haifa household-goods merchant, Shmuel Brandes, was fined IL1,000 in the Magistrate's Court here yesterday for making an illegal 51 per cent profit on a bottle of carpet-cleaning fluid.

Brandes, who runs a store at 50 Rehov Eshkol, was brought to court after charging a local woman IL33 for the product — a price which the Commerce and Industry Ministry found exorbitant.

In pressing the charge, the Ministry noted that the cleaning fluid is a price-protected product, and Brandes' 51 per cent profit was far out of line.

Algeria rejects Japanese extradition request

TOKYO. — Algeria yesterday rejected a Japanese request to extradite the terrorists who hijacked the Japan Air Lines plane last week. The Foreign Ministry said here. The five Japanese Red Army gunmen hijacked the DC-8 plane over India on September 26 and successfully bargained for the release of six terrorists held in Japanese jails and for the world's biggest air hijack cash ransom of $2m.

Before the last hostage were released Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda personally approved a decision that Japan would waive its right to extradite the hijackers if the plane could be allowed to land in Algeria, the Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

Kennosuke Yanagita, director-general of the ministry's information and cultural bureau, also said that Fukuda approved the decision that Japan would agree not to demand the return of the $2m. paid to the hijackers.

Yanagita said Algeria had imposed these conditions for receiving the hijacked plane with 19 hostages still aboard on Monday. The terrorists first forced the Paris-Tokyo JAL flight to Dacca. After receiving the money and six prisoners, the hijackers ordered the plane to Kuwait, Damascus and Algeria, where they freed their remaining hostages and turned themselves over to Algerian authorities.

Brahim Ghafsa, the Algerian ambassador to Japan, conveying a message from his government to Foreign Minister Ichiro Hatoyama, said yesterday Algeria has no intention of turning over the hijackers or ransom.

Ghafsa told Hatoyama, according to Foreign Ministry officials, that Algerian authorities complied with Japan's earlier requests and that his government felt no need to honour what Prime Minister Fukuda called Japan's latest "plea," to extradite the terrorists and return the ransom. The reversal in policy in the extradition request was seen as relieving pressure which built up over speedy government surrender to the Red Army demands.

Meanwhile, it was revealed that the terrorists overlooked nearly $2m. worth of diamonds which were on board the plane.

"I think in this moment the hijackers are not aware that they had $2m. worth of diamonds sitting there right across from the command centre," said former California Assemblyman Walter Karabian, 39, who held an airport news conference after returning home.

"These diamonds were in packages put right on top of the seat where the stewardess generally sits and remained there in these plain unmarked packages during the entire hijacking episode."

"And when we were released on the fifth day, one of the stewardesses just casually picked up these boxes, nearly $2m. in diamonds, and walked off the airplane with them."

'Killing is like swatting fly for TV addict'

MIAMI (AP). — A teenager who shot and killed a woman neighbour after she found him ransacking her home had been "conditioned" by watching violent television shows and was merely "reacting to the words he heard on TV," a psychiatrist testified on Wednesday.

"Television gives a distorted sense of violence, because when one sees that many killings, the death of a human being is no more than the swatting of a fly," said Dr. Michael Gilbert, testifying for the defence in the first-degree murder trial of 15-year-old Ronny Zamora.

He said Zamora reacted subliminally when Elnor Haggart, 33, surprised him and 14-year-old Darryl Agrella in her home on June 4 and threatened to call the police. Agrella also is charged in the slaying but is to be tried separately.

Zamora "had never even held a gun before," Gilbert said. "He was merely a conditioned response when he pulled the trigger. As far as Ronny is concerned, the gun went off accidentally."

Gilbert was expected to be the last witness presented by defence attorney Ellis Rubin, who has argued that Zamora was insane at the time of the slaying — driven to insanity by virtual addiction to television crime shows such as "Kojak" and "Police Woman."

The major portion of the defence case was to have been built on the relationship between television violence and real-life violence, and "Kojak" star Telly Savalas was subpoenaed by Rubin to testify.

The lawyer said an episode of "Kojak," which Zamora's mother testified was the boy's favourite show, bore a resemblance to the slaying of Mrs. Haggart.

But Circuit Court Judge Paul Baker refused to admit testimony from a defence psychologist who has published more than 15 papers on television violence and was considered a key defence witness.

On Tuesday, Baker excluded the testimony of Dr. Margaret Hanratty Thomas after she said she had never been able to link conclusively a particular television show or a particular amount of television violence viewed to a murder. And he sustained objections to another defence psychologist's testimony on Wednesday, saying that testimony about television and violence had to relate directly to Zamora to be admissible.

Rubin then released Savalas from the subpoena because he said it would be "a waste of time and money" to bring the actor to court since his testimony would be inadmissible under the judge's rulings.

Iran to buy reactors, airliners from France

PARIS (AP). — Iran has agreed to buy two nuclear power stations and 10 to 12 Airbus 350-seat airliners from France, a presidential spokesman announced here yesterday.

The Shah of Iran is anxious to switch from oil to nuclear power to conserve Iran's oil resources. Iran helped France in the financing of the Eurordif gaseous diffusion plant for enriching uranium. Observers said the decision to buy the Franco-German Airbus was of major importance to the French aviation industry, which has found it difficult to sell the aircraft in any number.

UK Labour urges aid for Rhodesian rebels

BRIGHTON (Reuters). — British Foreign Secretary David Owen said yesterday he hoped to have ceasefire negotiations in Rhodesia begin "within weeks."

But shortly after he addressed the Labour Party's annual conference here it voted for a resolution calling on the British government to "give material and moral support to freedom fighters in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia)."

The conference went against the advice of the Party leadership in endorsing this resolution, which also called for sanctions against South Africa to cut off the flow of goods into Rhodesia.

Dr. Owen, appealing for diplomacy to be given a chance to bring about change in southern Africa declared: "A free Zimbabwe in 1978 is within our grasp." Replying to critics he said there is no soft-pedalling in the government attitude towards southern Africa.

The conference ignored an appeal from Party national executive member Alex Kilson not to approve the resolution calling for material support to guerrillas, and voted for it on a show of hands.

But after the vote Owen asserted that "the government's policy will remain unchanged." Asked what effect the resolution would have on Anglo-American efforts to ensure majority rule, he replied: "Not much."

Bride from Leningrad

Afo Agbariah was not the first Israeli Arab to marry while studying in a Communist country. A Rakah official estimates that there are at least 20 Soviet, Polish, Czech and Bulgarian non-Jewish women living in various villages of the Galilee and the Triangle, as well as in the Arab neighbourhoods of mixed-population centres. JOAN BORSTEN reports.

Dr. Afo Agbariah with his Russian-born wife Ludmilla and son Raglan.

that marriage between Soviet citizens and foreigners is usually discouraged. Exceptions are made when the foreigner is from a country the Soviets would like in their camp, or if he is a member of the International Communist Party.) Afo would have preferred to settle permanently in the USSR ("It's a wonderful country, truly democratic, and I had many, many friends there including some Jews"). However, he had signed an agreement with Rakah stipulating that he would return to his homeland to work for the Party. Ludmilla wasn't afraid to join him, despite past wars and the absence of diplomatic relations between the USSR and Israel.

How did Ludmilla feel about settling in an enemy country? "I never thought of Israel as an enemy," Afo returned to Israel last year to begin working as an intern at the Hadassah government hospital (where he will shortly specialize in surgery) and to build Ludmilla a large, modern home in Umm El Fahm. Soviet immigrants directed him to a notary public who wrote out (in Russian) a hasmanah inviting Ludmilla, as a member of Afo's immediate family, to Israel. She presented the invitation to OVR (the Soviet agency which controls visas) and three months later was given official permission to apply for a passport. The Netherlands Embassy in Moscow, which acts for Israel in the USSR, granted her an Israeli visa on the spot. In Israel, as a Soviet citizen, the Finns will represent her interests.

Despite her husband's atheist views, Ludmilla, who was a member of the Komsomol (the youth wing of the Communist Party) will be registered in her Israeli identity card as a Christian.

Ludmilla has spent her first two months in Israel acclimatizing, adjusting to Umm El Fahm (which, says her husband, because of a weak local council is the "dirtiest village in Israel"), learning Arabic, and caring for her 14-month-old son. Once she has learned the language properly she hopes to open a dental practice in the village.

Afo knew of two other Arab-Russian couples living in Northern Israel (and one couple in the Triangle). Ahmad Zeid, a Kfar Yasif youth worker, and his wife, Galila, could not be reached — according to relatives they had gone to Moscow for two weeks to attend an international conference. Afti Kaseem, a reporter for "Al-Bi-Ti-Had," the Arabic-language Rakah-owned Israeli newspaper, was at home in Nazareth (unlike Afo, he lives in his parent's house), but his wife, Valentina, was visiting family in the USSR.

Afti is a dyed-in-the-wool Communist who continually spouts the party line ("The USSR is the most democratic country in the world; the USSR is the only country which abides by the Helsinki accords"). He was sent by Rakah to study journalism in Leningrad ("the most beautiful city in Europe") where he met Valentina, a geography student. He returned to Israel in 1976 bringing Valentina with him, but they have yet to take advantage of their customs and tax privileges ("we're not interested in those kinds of rights"). What Afti is interested in is "the return of the Palestinians to their homeland." Were he not one of those Palestinians "still in the homeland," he would have stayed in the Soviet Union "rather than let the Israelis screw up my head."

Another couple living in Nazareth is Paula and Yasin Abu Assad. Paula is a Czech citizen. She met her husband, now a doctor at the local Kupat Holim, while he was studying medicine in Brno, but not under the auspices of Rakah. "That began much later," he explains. "I went to Czechoslovakia in 1960 with the help of the Cultural Attache of the Czech Embassy in Tel Aviv. I couldn't get into an Israeli medical school because of poor Hebrew and low matriculation scores. In Brno, I paid my tuition and living expenses with whatever money my family could send and a stipend from the Czech government."

Paula, who was a philosophy student (she has an MA) at the same university, thought Yasin was a Spaniard at first. Like Ludmilla, she had no objection to going out with a foreigner or to settling with him in Israel. "I explained to her what the situation was," says Yasin, "how we live, that the standard of living is lower in Israel than in Czechoslovakia where more services like education and health are completely free."

The couple did not marry, however, until Yasin had consulted the Israeli Ambassador in Prague and obtained a letter stating that he could bring Paula back to Nazareth with him "providing we had a proper wedding certificate." Like most Czechs, they were married in a civil ceremony though Paula's parents regularly attend church as she did when living in Brno.

Paula, who has been in Israel for five years, now teaches handicrafts at a local high school. Like her two sons, both born in Czechoslovakia, she learned Arabic from Yasin who "literally sat with all three of us several hours a day for more than a year." She also has learned to cook Arab foods.

Since settling in Nazareth, the Abu Assads have visited Czechoslovakia three times.

Interestingly enough, neither Yehudit Eshner of the Interior Ministry who handles "unusual cases," nor the Consular department of the Foreign Ministry, nor the Northern Israel offices of the Prime Minister's adviser on Arab Affairs knew that Ludmilla, Valentina, and Paula were living in Israel.

PELE THE PERFECT

TELEREVIEW / Philip Gillon

or ill-tempered act, never fouled an opponent deliberately. All too often he was on the receiving end of fouls. The referees given to, or accused of, forward bias in proportionate to the game to the referee, by stopping them violently in action, and unscrupulous defenders, knowing this, did not hesitate to bring down a forward who has beaten them by fair means or foul. Another great genius, almost Pele's equal, George Best, was literally fouled out of the game, because he reacted, vigorously to wrongs, putting himself in the wrong. Pele just got up and went on with the game.

The programme was so moving that I for one was sorry that it ended. It was a perfect compound of action, sentiment, sentimentality and technique.

pompous ass charged by the second Mrs. Hardy with writing the definitive biography of the sage of the West-country was said to be Hugh Walpole. It is curious to note how what was savage satire of the English upper-middle class in the thirties still stands up, one is as impressed by the roasting low-class heroes in the pub, and as revolted by the Malvolio-like widow and her cronies in the drawing-room, now that we see them on videotape, as we were when we read about them.

As usual with a British production of a period piece in which the tempo is not very important, the production, direction and acting are all just this side of perfection, although the laughing, illiduous Judy Cornwell is a little bit too hearty and earthy to be real. She might be fun in the hay, but that laugh of hers would grate afterwards.

Saturday night's two-part, "Law and Order," is quite a different kettle of fish, very grim and portentous, but very good. The two films, both using lots of flashbacks, provide interesting examples of the different between British and American techniques. The flashbacks in "Cakes and Ale" slow the pace down to that of a Victorian hansom; the flashbacks in "Law and Order" rush things along like a taxi trying to make the airport in time. I only wish that all films were of the standard of these two.

ONE of my usual favourites, "Starsky and Hutch," was awful this week. I mentioned recently a tendency of script-writers to repeat their ideas; here it was done again. It seems that it was only yesterday that the villains were filling Hutch with heroin; here they pushed some mysterious and fatal chloroform compound into Starsky. Why the boys don't lock their doors at night is beyond my comprehension. I also found it hard to understand why the mad professor and the dope pusher didn't just put a revolver to the sleeping Starsky's spinal column, and fire. Finally, if ever there was a sound reason for Hutch to use violence, it was in the last scene with the mad professor, out of whom he should have beaten the daylight to get the all-important secret; instead, he went all spiritual, as if he were David Soul singing a folk song. (David Soul, who acts Hutch, is also a singer and entertainer.) Instead of reacting with diabolical laughter, the professor was so moved that he produced the magic test-tube.

By contrast, "Kojak" was outstanding this week, humming with great scenes and magnificent dialogue. For my sins, I had seen the episode before — presumably on Jordan — but did not enjoy it any the less because I remembered it. The one scene, where Kojak hurls the murderer into a coffin, and then sits on it, eating a lollipop — what Israeli children call a "Kojak" — while he waits for the troops and the accused howls for his rights and his lawyer, was really a classic.

"The Sweeney" was also very good, although somewhat perplexing because the uncouth sadistic villain, who gets such a kick out of hurting people, was acted by the same man, and in the same way, as an Irish killer was acted a couple of weeks ago. That one was eventually caught in a cricket pavilion, and I had an uneasy feeling last Friday night that he was being given a second chance to bat. I suppose we must expect these repetitious situations in low-budget serials. There was one marvellous exchange between Regan and George about the handsome new recruit who turns out to be ill-lived; when Regan is outlining the good-looking sergeant's flaws, George says, "He's a cricketer." "Yeah, I was coming to that," says Regan grimly, whose game, no doubt, is professional rugby in Yorkshire.

I would be interested to know what critics of violence thought of "Pinochio," given to the children as a holiday treat. I thought it one of the most frightening films I had ever seen, what with the little boy's nose burning and he dying. One of my young friends woke up that night, crying that there were wild animals in his bed. Cause and effect? Starsky, Kojak, and the Sweeney can never be as cruel or frightening as Grimm's fairy tales, or many of the cartoons we see.

IT WAS a great pleasure to see again Max Baer, the one-time heavyweight boxing champion of the world, who never really related violence, in the right mood, he could out-clown Mohammed Ali himself, although I must add that Ali has never been fed a straight man to equal Primo Camera. Still, Ali does very well as the champion who thinks, like Thomas Hardy that it is all an immense joke. It is a pity that the Pele show deprived us of a chance to see the big Mohammed Ali fight, but we cannot have everything.

Max Baer appeared in one of the sketches in "Love American Style," which is thrown to us during happy festivals, rather like a bone thrown to a starving dog. Why we cannot see any funny series except "All in the Family" during non-festival days is still beyond my comprehension.

This week's episode of "All in the Family" was, I think, the best we have ever seen. Mike as the fast-using pacifist was great; so was the Marxist Black drawing "Das Kapital" deductions from the non-moving train; so were the wine and the doctor evading a lawsuit and the pharmacist and his wife, Archie's final comment, "This will teach you to take a train to see a house in the Bronx," reminded me of the New York millionaire whose son said to him a break-in in their Park Avenue penthouse. "Dad, I'm in terrible trouble. Last night I was in a night club on the West Side, and had some trouble with a girl, and now I face charges of rape and attempted murder." The millionaire said, aghast, "My God, my son, how did you ever get to be on the West Side?"

Jerusalem Post Reporter

A total of 13,100 job offers were received at labour exchanges during September, compared with 34,100 in August, the Employment Service reported. The number of job seekers also fell — from 18,800 in August to 16,100 last month.

Labour Ministry director-general Arye Gurel says there is no need for more "special committees" to tackle "imaginary" unemployment problems. Gurel, head of the "Job Task Force" appointed last year, said the unit is keeping up-to-date with current job market trends. Specific state-sponsored work projects are already on tap, to be put into effect if and when the need arises, he said.

Gurel's "Task Force" consists of representatives from the Government, the Histadrut and the Manufacturers Association. The emergency work projects available so far are said to provide approximately 12,500 worth of public construction and site development work. In addition — should mass unemployment strike — some 20,000 persons would be re-trained to fill jobs in demand, while the trainees receive full unemployment pay benefits from the National In-

Insurance Institute. Another plan calls for granting incentives to firms hiring idle workers laid off by their employers.

Summer jobs were taken by about 34,000 youngsters during the school holiday, the Labour Ministry's youth division reports. Unlike previous years, the boys and girls this year were willing to do more manual labour. A survey shows they earned more than IL25m. during their employment period, as they replaced regular workers on summer leave.

The labour exchanges this year found it more difficult than ever to get boys and girls to join in the grape harvest. Ben Katz, in charge of agricultural placement at the Employment Service, reported that 35,000 workdays were needed for this year's harvest — in the south and in Samaria — which came later than usual because of weather conditions. The yield fell from last year's 40,000 tons (on 45,000 dunams of vineyards) to about 30,000 tons grown on 38,000 dunams.

The Labour Ministry has embarked on a programme of developing new teaching aids for its various apprenticeships, vocational training, job re-training and other courses. The project — under the aegis of the Educational Media and Curriculum Branch — includes such schemes as "psychological strategy games" to develop the student's personal identity as a member of society; "Mirrors of the Past" — a series of historical flashbacks stressing the role of productive work in the betterment of society; and "games of ethics" which attempt to expand the student's and trainee's sensitivity to courtesy, honesty and other requisites of good citizenship.

A special school curriculum for boys and girls in prison has been prepared by the Labour Ministry. The emphasis is placed on preparing the young offenders for a "clean life" when they are released. Subjects include biology, family life, Israeli-Arab relations, civics, Bible and journalism.

The Labour Ministry has embarked on a programme of developing new teaching aids for its various apprenticeships, vocational training, job re-training and other courses. The project — under the aegis of the Educational Media and Curriculum Branch — includes such schemes as "psychological strategy games" to develop the student's personal identity as a member of society; "Mirrors of the Past" — a series of historical flashbacks stressing the role of productive work in the betterment of society; and "games of ethics" which attempt to expand the student's and trainee's sensitivity to courtesy, honesty and other requisites of good citizenship.

A special school curriculum for boys and girls in prison has been prepared by the Labour Ministry. The emphasis is placed on preparing the young offenders for a "clean life" when they are released. Subjects include biology, family life, Israeli-Arab relations, civics, Bible and journalism.

Energy savings for hotels

By ARTHUR KEMELMAN

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — How hotels can conserve energy will be one of the central themes of the 3rd International Hotel and Catering Exhibition, which opens on Monday for five days at the Fair Grounds.

Elisha Almagor, director general of the Israel Trade Fair Centre, the organizer of the exhibition, said that according to recent surveys only about 12 per cent of a hotel's electricity bill goes towards lighting. Heating, air-conditioning, cooking and elevators use far more electricity.

During the exhibition one day will be devoted to a symposium, conducted by leading Israeli scientists, on how hotels can conserve energy — and save money. Visitors will also be able to inspect various systems and equipment for reducing energy loss.

This includes, Almagor noted, solar heating systems, but also modern insulation methods, devices to prevent water leakage, and insulated piping.

The primary aim of the exhibition, however, is to display a wide range of equipment, furnishings and other products, capable of giving the tourist industry the answers to the challenge of increased tourism to Israel.

According to industry officials, the objective for 1985 is three million visitors. Details of this development plan will be presented at the exhibition by Ministry of Industry, Commerce and Tourism officials.

Increased exports of peanuts, flowers

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Israel is planning to increase its peanut exports. The crop is one of many agricultural exports which will be increased. Other export items will be sent out for the first time.

During the past agricultural export season we exported 250 million flowers. This year the target figure is 400 million.

Yehiel Shehori, deputy-director general of the Ministry of Agriculture said at a press conference here Wednesday that to reach this figure growers will not only increase the number of traditional flowers, mainly roses,

Fight over management of the IMF

WASHINGTON (AP). — The election of the next managing director of the International Monetary Fund could lead to a clash between Western Europe and the world's major oil producing countries aligned with some other nations.

The countries of the European Economic Community (EEC) are said to be determined to have a European succeed managing director Johannes Witteveen of the Netherlands, who has announced that he will retire from his post next year.

The 13 nations grouped in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) are understood to be pressing for a veto power over the selection of a successor to Witteveen.

Although India is not a member of OPEC, India's finance minister H.M. Patel told a news conference Thursday that the time has come to stop considering that the post of managing director of the fund is reserved for a European. All of the fund's managing directors have been Western Europeans.

Patel said it is India's position that the most competent person on regardless of nationality should be named by the fund to succeed Witteveen.

Witteveen announced last week that he would not accept a second term as the fund's managing director when his current term expires in August 1978. Officials said no policy differences with any of the fund's member nations prompted his decision, but that he wanted to return to his homeland to be with his wife and four children.

The OPEC nations are pumping billions of dollars into the institution and they clearly want a voice in the decision-making process of the development banks. Well-informed officials here said the traditional policy of having an American serve as president of the World Bank and a non-American as managing director of the Monetary Fund will be maintained when Witteveen's successor is named. The election will be held in the first half of 1978.

BEIRUT (UPI). — United Arab Emirates President Sheikh Zayed al-Nahyan on Tuesday inaugurated a $400-million gas liquefaction plant on Das Island.

Al Nahyan also gave the go-ahead to begin exporting the gas to Japan, which has contracted to buy the plant's production for 20 years.

Fund guarantees yield

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Ophir is a brand-new mutual fund, under the management of Bank Leumi's FIA, and it brings with it an innovation on the mutual fund scene. The fund's managers guarantee the investor a minimum, predetermined yield for a period of up to two years, beginning with three months from the date of issue, namely October 5, 1977.

PIA guarantees that three months after the purchase of Ophir, it will redeem, upon request, the units at no less than the redemption price on the day offered, along with full linkage to the consumer price index for the period that the units were held. After the third month and for every three months thereafter, the guaranteed sum will be raised until it reaches 104 per cent, along with full linkage.

The period of the extended guarantee is limited to 24 months. The just issued units will be linked to the consumer price index for October, which will be announced by the Central Bureau of Statistics on November 15.

The policy of PIA will be to invest at least 95 per cent of all funds in securities which are fully or partially linked to the consumer index.

The initial makeup of the portfolio is: 35 per cent optional loans; 20-25 per cent 6.5 per cent linked-to-index; 7-10 per cent Absorption and Defence Loans; 30-35 per cent four per cent loans with redemptions 84-8 years.

The cost of the redemption insurance is a one-time fee of 1.5 per cent of the value of the investment.

The Ophir Fund with its minimum guaranteed return is based on the assessment that an investment in index-linked bonds, at current levels, is most attractive.

Pal joins Holiday Inn chain

By DAVID LENNON

Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Holiday Inn will join the ranks of the international hotel chains in Israel when it takes over management of the Pal Hotel here on November 1.

The name of the famous American company will rise over the 347-room five-star hotel on the sea front and work will commence immediately on a $3m. renovation, according to Nat-tal Bahiri, the Pal general manager.

This will be the third name change for the hotel which opened in 1961 as the Tel Aviv Sheraton. Three years ago the Sheraton lease expired on the hotel, and it was bought by the Palub family, which renamed it the Pal.

The hotel suffered losses during the tourist famine following the 1973 war, and Palub decided to sell. The buyer was David Teig of Frankfurt, who owns 40 per cent of the Tel Aviv Hilton.

After Teig asked Holiday Inn to take over the management, the American company reported that considerable investment was needed to bring the hotel up to its standards. Teig agreed to the Holiday Inn recommendation, and further indicated that he is planning to enlarge his hotel to 750 or 800 rooms. The plan is for six to eight floors to be added to the existing structures.

Holiday Inn are planning to train their own personnel in order to overcome the staff shortage here.

The chain first considered the Israeli market in the late sixties, but the plans for a motel outside Jerusalem were not realized.

The Tel Aviv Holiday Inn will be a hotel, and not a motel. In this company is following its American motel rival, Ramada, which also manages a hotel on the Tel Aviv sea front.

Begin's weak flank

ONE OF THE FIRST items of business awaiting Prime Minister Begin following his expected release from hospital next week will be the completion of his Cabinet. Five Ministries — Justice, Social Welfare, Labour, Transport and Communications — have been entrusted to a caretaker, Deputy Minister Yoram Aridor, for the past 100 days, pending a final decision on the inclusion of the Democratic Movement for Change in the coalition.

It is now clear that the DMC will not join, despite the barely disguised panic of a substantial minority of its members to enter the government before the door is shut in their face. The manning of the unoccupied ministerial posts is long overdue, and cannot be further delayed.

The Justice Ministry is to be filled by non-party lawyer Amnon Goldenberg, and Mr. Begin is said to be intent on placing his long-time comrade from IZL days, former M.K. Haim Landau, in charge of the Ministry for Social Betterment, which is slated to replace Labour and Welfare. A number of undistinguished Liberal Party stalwarts are expected to fight it out for the combined Ministry of Transport and Communications.

To judge from public reactions, no one outside the immediate protagonists could care very much who fills which Ministry. While the naming of Mr. Landau to Social Betterment constitutes payment of a personal debt by Mr. Begin to an old-time shield-bearer, it will hardly provide the necessary push to the creation of a coherent and effective welfare establishment.

All in all, it would seem that the early forecasts which saw Mr. Begin concentrating, like his predecessors in office, on foreign affairs to the detriment of domestic problems, are coming true. But while the leading foreign-and-defence policy team of Begin-Dayan-Weizman does not suffer by comparison with the Rabin-Peres-Allon team, on the basis of available evidence of the first 100 days, the same cannot be said of the crew of domestic affairs Ministers. Minister Ehrlich seems to be cut out of the Rabinowitz cloth, and the other Ministers with the exception of Mr. Sharon, have so far made no public impact at all.

One of the major problems of the Likud, and of its constituent parties due probably to their long seemingly hopeless chance of obtaining office, was that men of outstanding leadership qualities and administrative abilities were either not attracted to it, or if they were, remained committed to their private or professional interests. But even when this is taken into account, it appears that not everything has been done by the new coalition to seek out and put forward its best men.

Mr. Begin could have done better with his domestic ministerial team. Certainly the nation deserves better of a party leadership that, earlier this year, brought about the first meaningful change in the distribution of political power in Israel's history. Perhaps it is still not too late for the Prime Minister to take another hard look at what he — admittedly, under his party's pressure — has wrought.

"I NEVER promised you a rose garden." That's what the Likud leaders' theme song should be, now that they find themselves subject to party pressures for the distribution of the fruits of power. They are now feeling the stings of the thorns in the victory bouquet.

Prime Minister Begin originally — before, that is, he was taken ill — set October 17, when the Knesset reconvenes for its winter session, as his deadline for announcing the final composition of his administration. Admittedly the country appears to be managing somehow without Ministers of Justice, Social Welfare and Labour, and Transport and Communications (although Deputy Minister Yoram Aridor is managing struggling with all these functions). Yet it is obviously unacceptable that these important areas of government be left without permanent direction.

On the eve of Finance Minister Ehrlich's departure on his month-long trip to the States, the two Likud leaders are said to have aired their preferences for the vacant positions. Begin wanted Supreme Court Justice Meir Shamgar, an IZL member in pre-state days, for Justice, and his Deputy Party chairman Prof. Moshe Arens for the combined Social Betterment Ministry, with Ehrlich naming his party comrade, Moshe Nisim, for the third seat. In the intervening weeks, however, events caused that neat package deal to fall apart. It is already being said that, however little Premier Begin wished to have Prof. Yadin and his DMC colleagues in his Cabinet, he would now prefer them to the head-aches — and heart-aches — involved in the party discussions over the formation of the Cabinet.

Firstly, Justice Shamgar was disinclined to leave the safe heights of the judiciary for the hazards of politics, especially as he has excellent prospects of succeeding Justice Sussman to the Presidency of the Supreme Court. Begin's choice, announced this week, was Dr. Amnon Goldenberg, an outstanding young Tel Aviv lawyer who not long ago turned down the offer of a seat on the high bench. Although once an ardent Zionist, Goldenberg has since become a liberal, and his party's attitude is seen with the wreckage of aspirants' careers.

Until about a fortnight ago, the word was that Begin's favourite was Sharon: witness Sharon's inclusion in the negotiating team with Secretary of State Vance, and, witness, too, his appointment as Chairman of the Cabinet settlement

Competition for the still unfilled Cabinet posts is at a peak, revealing the inner tensions besetting the factions that make up the Likud, says correspondent MARK SEGAL.

MUSICAL CHAIRS

party. It is argued that two of its rightful Cabinet seats went to Moshe Dayan and Ariel Sharon, neither of whom, to say the least, ran on the party ticket. Complaints from Herut blend with those coming from the Liberals, who resent what they consider to be the disproportionate share of power awarded the smaller Likud faction. The Herut people openly say that it was they who brought in the mass vote, and that they should be rewarded accordingly.

THIS UNHAPPY feeling was behind the truculence that characterized the two recent Herut central committee meetings which voted on the party executive.

Three MKs openly attacked the new executive: Goula Cohen, Michael Dalkiel and Ronnie Milo, with the latter two only staying on the executive at Begin's personal urging. They, like other members of Herut, are bound by unwavering loyalty to the Party Chairman, but the question of the pecking order, or rather the leadership succession issue, is not far from their minds.

The temporary coalitions of party groupings observed during Herut's discussions of the allocation of Cabinet posts and the executive's composition may also be seen against the larger backdrop of the succession issue.

Three names are mentioned in this connection: Defence Minister Ezer Weizman; Arens, who is also Chairman of the Knesset Defence and Foreign Affairs Committee; and Sharon. Begin has always been a great one for playing off would-be successors against one another, and his party's attitude is seen with the wreckage of aspirants' careers.

Until about a fortnight ago, the word was that Begin's favourite was Sharon: witness Sharon's inclusion in the negotiating team with Secretary of State Vance, and, witness, too, his appointment as Chairman of the Cabinet settlement committee. In addition, Cabinet responsibility for the administrative territories appeared to be shifting to Sharon from the traditional seat of the Defence Ministry. This was seen as a direct snub to Weizman.

There are those who say that Begin has never forgiven the defence chief for having stood up to him and walked out of the party executive, only to return last year in order to so brilliantly manage the Likud's election campaign.

It is also interesting to note how Begin's new favourite, Arens, aside into the honorable but unimportant position of Deputy Party Chairman, when the professor actually sought the key job of Party Executive Chairman — previously filled by Knesset Speaker Yitzhak Shamir and later by Weizman. This position has assumed major significance with Begin's attention now devoted to affairs of state. Avraham Schechterman won't let Arens' move go unnoticed, and he initially had Begin's backing, and Eitan Lavi (Begin's old party organizer).

But Begin backed Schechterman when it came to getting the new party executive through the central committee. In the face of internal opposition, Arens' own weak performance as chairman with the meeting getting out of hand, only highlighted the firm guidance provided by Weizman's successful call for order. Of added interest was the presence on the executive of such familiar Weizman supporters as expert treasurer Yosef Kramerman, not a universally popular choice with those who blame him for the Tel Aviv fund mess.

DURING ALL the emotional uproar, never far beneath the surface in Herut, Sharon sat at the top table looking rather disinterested, like the favourite nephew waiting patiently for the uncle's will to be read out at a stormy family meeting. His look of boredom vanished into huge smiles when a follower came up to shake his hand.

Begin allowed Sharon to bring his Shimshoni party into Herut en bloc, permitting the first recognized party faction with its proportional share of party honours. Whether this was intended to enhance Sharon's standing versus Weizman and Arens is a matter for guessing. However, more recently Sharon's shares have appeared to dip in the Herut market, especially after the torrent of publicity he unleashed on settlement issues.

One indication of this was the report about latter day speculation among the top Likud leadership with Sharon that appeared in the week-end column of "Yediot Aharanot" by political correspondent Shlomo Nekdimon, who is known as a confidant of the Prime Minister. There is speculation that Sharon's extremism is not so much the product of his so-called "open mouthed policy," as of political design. The Agriculture Minister is now moving to occupy the position of leader and spokesman of the extremist wing of Herut, as Begin and his associates move toward the centre under pressure of national responsibility and in response to Washington.

Thus the removal of the intolerable Sharon from his present Cabinet position would precipitate an internal party crisis. Those who favour this interpretation see Sharon using his struggle for ascendancy as part of the Likud's councils, and thus for a strategic position in stakes of succession.

FOR THE MOMENT Begin's main problem in coupling Arens, No. 4 on the Herut Knesset list, is the professor's declared preference for Communications and Transport over Social Betterment. The rub is that the Herut Knesset faction claims Social Betterment as its own, arguing they owe this to the mass of low income voters who put them into of-

One major problem for the Likud is the large number of aspirants whose high up themselves is not widely known. Thus Menachem Savdov's career has not prevented him from contesting Knesset's candidate Tel Aviv Deputy Mayor Daman, whose short spell at Town Hall has given him a reputation for ruining the city's meat, now would appear to repeat the performance on a scale. A truly bright young man, he is expected to go places in a new MK and the 1st General Secretary, whilst a Katz MK is scheduled to Deputy Education Minister reported, the Liberals h NRP's Yehuda Ben-Meir to Arens as chairman of the Defence and Foreign Affairs

Some critics will no doubt note that most of the political involvement in the coalition's musical chairs are not a very long lot. That may be so. Yet not far from the level of the members of the departing Government, and they work better as a team.

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
 Sir, — As directors (along with Michael Kurutz and Yitzhak Rona) of the Fisherman's Village at Nueiba, we appreciated Diana Lerner's article of September 8 on fishing in the Red Sea. But we would like to set the record straight by making the following observations.

1. Our catch at Nueiba was 50 per cent greater than last year — and as we acquire more experience of fish movements and invest in more nets and equipment, we hope to increase this substantially in the future. Our total catch in the Red Sea was, however, 120 tons of palamida, not 47 tons.

2. It is correct that there has not been an adequate scientific survey of the total quantity which could be caught, but some experts are prepared to hazard guesses. Mr. Ben Yami, one of the Ministry of Agriculture's top experts, estimated that at least 10,000 tons of palamida appear in the Red Sea each season. We ourselves spent a substantial sum of money bringing out an international expert from South Africa, for two months this season. He was impressed with what he saw, but we are still awaiting a detailed report from him. Although we made this investment privately, there is no doubt that, in principle, it is the Government's function to survey fishery resources, not private fishermen.

3. We have not asked the Government "to provide half the investment for the expanded village." We have not asked for hand-outs from anybody. Everything we have put up on our site has been with our own capital and initiative.

4. It may be correct that at Di-Zahav, "the catch was drastically reduced as soon as the place became a tourist centre." We have got nothing to do with Di-Zahav. Our fish restaurant has expanded incredibly this year, catering to tourists from Israel and overseas. And at the same time we have expanded our fishing activities which are still the backbone of our company.

We also have plans for processing smoked fish, "lakuda", and salted fish. We are doubling our freezing space, which is the key to fisheries development in the area. We have a definite future interest in fish breeding and particularly shrimp breeding; and on the tourist side, the development of facilities for sports fishing. We will undoubtedly need government financial assistance, but this will be on a business basis, the same as any other enterprise in a development area.

5. If we have any complaint, it is not really against the government authorities who have seen what we have achieved on our own and who unanimously approve and are anxious to cooperate with us. And when money is invested, it will either be money from our own pockets, or money for which we have to arrange proper guarantees.

We believe that we will prosper in direct relationship to the service that we give the public and the skill and hard work we put into our fishing. We feel that it is a tremendous privilege to develop the beautiful area around Nueiba, and we are determined to prove worthy of it.

THE ARABS' REAL GOAL

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
 Sir, — It is good that President Carter gets a summary of The Jerusalem Post. He may thus learn the lessons of history and correctly evaluate Arab intentions.

President Carter may have forgotten how the Nazis promised to be satisfied with the Anschluss, despite the fact that the goals announced in their doctrine included all Europe. But has President Carter forgotten how the Paris peace treaty with what was once North Vietnam dissolved in fulfillment of North Vietnam's unification doctrine?

Let the Arab actions be satisfied with a Palestinian homeland in currently disputed territory, they could have achieved their goal.

completed this themselves before 1967. But their doctrine demands Arab sovereignty over all Israel, euphemistically described as "Palestinian rights." Towards this goal, they now seek the stepping stone of Judea and Samaria. The American State Department only requests temporary renunciation of the Arabs' ultimate goal in exchange for American aid in this endeavour.

The United States gave away South Vietnam at Paris. For what price will the Carter administration now play Judas to Israel at the UN or, perhaps, Geneva?

SPIRITUAL ORPHANS

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
 Sir, — It was most disturbing to read Rabbi Gerson Winer's report on his experience with some secularist kibbutzim to which he endeavoured to bring the blessing of High Holiday services (September 12). Kof hakovod to him for his valiant efforts. It is hard to say who should take more of the blame: the blind kibbutz faction or the religious community which has neglected this aspect of its work.

However, the sorry situation should not be exaggerated by excessive generalizations. Many kibbutzim have built synagogues and use them — certainly on the High Holydays. Some years ago, I volunteered to spend Yom Kippur in a northern kibbutz: it was a meaningful experience and I was spared some of the distressing experiences of Rabbi Winer.

I blame myself and my rabbinic colleagues in Israel for not being more active in this field. One does not have to be a Conservative rabbi to qualify for this work, as Rabbi Winer gratuitously suggests. Much remains to be done by us to give service in more than one sense to those who should be considered spiritual orphans in our midst.

POSTSCRIPTS

MANY READERS may recall the strange story that surfaced around Yom Kippur last year concerning a young Beduin man who suddenly announced that he believed himself a Jew. The story was that he had been kidnapped as a child from a Jewish family and raised in the tents of nomads. Only when he reached his early twenties, so the story goes, did the man, known as Abdallah, learn the truth of his origins. Several Jewish families subsequently claimed him as their own and Abdallah was reported to have finally fled to the desert in confusion and distress. Just before Yom Kippur this year, however, Migdal Ha'emek's Rabbi Yitzhak David Grossman — the renowned rescuer of lost souls — announced that Abdallah is well on his way to solving his identity crisis. He has been living quietly at the nearby village of Moshav Tirosh, with the family of one Yisrael Gabai, which is certain that Abdallah is their long lost son. Rabbi Grossman reports that Abdallah "observes all the mitzvot" and just to confirm matters, has agreed to undergo conversion rituals into the Jewish faith.
